MACKINAC BRIDGE

Since 1864, when building a bridge across the straits was first proposed, until November 1, 1957, Mighty Mac was known as the "bridge that couldn't be built." On that day, the U.P. and lower Michigan were permanently tied together. There were more obstacles to overcome and problems solved in designing and building the Mackinac Bridge than any comparable project. Yet it is one of the most beautiful structures ever built and the most beautiful in the U.P. There are 33 foundations resting on bedrock supporting the 4-mile long uninterrupted steel superstructure. The 2 huge tower foundations descend more than 200 feet below the water and were built out on the water using boats, barges and ships handling the men, machinery and materials.
